II. Statistics of cases for the last four years in which each of the Dist: Prosecutors of the Circle Divisions has appeared on behalf of Govt are also sent for perusal. It will be seen therefrom that each Dist: Prosecutor has conducted from 50 to 55 cases on the average per year

Taking the average pay of the Pub: Prosecutor as Rs: 250/p. m., the remuneration in each case comes to about Rs: 5'5/-. Considering the fact that the cases in our Province are generally of a simple nature, the present remuneration does not at all seem to be inadequate. If it is intended to make the appointment more attractive, a daily fee of Rs: 5' 6' 10 in addition may perhaps be fixed, at the discretion of the District Magistrate, as half fee being allowed whenever the work does not occupy more than half a day.

Serial No. 27

From the enclosed Statement shewing the number of days taken up by Sessions, Criminal appeal & Miscellaneous Application work during the years 1914–1919, the average number of days each kind of work has taken up is as indicated below :-

		No. of days (average)
For Sessions-Cases.	In Bangalore. —	76
	" Mysore —	117
	" Shimoga —	100.
" Criminal appeals.	In Bangalore —	3
	" Mysore —	40.
	" Shimoga —	32.
" Miscellaneous applications	In Bangalore.	2
	" Mysore —	2
	" Shimoga —	12.

30) There is in an average each Public Prosecutor will have to attended;

98 days for Sessions work (in a year)
2.5 days for Appeal work
5 days for Misc. application work.

Submitted for orders, with reference to para 22 Supra

RL 8/19 Vs. 8/19 Criminal Secl

31) From the figures furnished above

Serial No.

it is seen that on an average the duties of a Public Prosecutor engage about half the working days in a year. In Bangalore it is somewhat less as the appellate work is done in the Chief Court by the Govt. advocate.

32) It will be seen that the rate of pay now fixed for Public Prosecutors ie 200-50-300 Rs. affords quite a reasonable remuneration giving about 20-25 Rs per working day.

33) I am not sure whether the adoption of a ~~pay~~ system of payment per day with a small retaining fee — as in certain States & provinces of India — will be any better than the present system. ~~or vice~~

34) The reasons why certain legal practitioners decline to take up the Public Prosecutorship appear to be (i) that the work occupies too much of their time & leaves little scope for civil work & (ii) that it makes them lose touch with their clientele & prevents them from securing an adequate practice after they give up the appointment.

35) These two objections will

exist whichever system of payment is adopted. In view of the variations in the figures for the three Divisions, payment by day will perhaps reduce the emoluments of the Public Prosecutor in B'lore & it may be difficult to secure a suitable candidate.

36) It seems to me that one way of making the appointments attractive would be to give an assurance that a Public Prosecutor who gives reasonable satisfaction will be kept on for a total period of 6 or 9 years, & that satisfactory service as Public Prosecutor will be regarded as creating a preferential claim for selection as Special Magistrate or even Munsiff or Subjudge when selections are made from the Bar

37) Such an inducement will enable Govt to secure the services of the really good men at the Bar -

It may be noted that the appointments of all Government Pleaders are made in the Legal Department, except that of the Government Pleader in the High Court which from March 1910 is dealt with in the office of the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor. Government Pleaders and Public Prosecutors are not regular servants of Government. The salaries of Government Pleaders in the Presidency proper were revised in 1911. These salaries are of the nature of retaining fees. Additional fees are allowed for actual work done in accordance with the Law Officers' Rules. In selecting candidates for the post of Government Pleaders and Public Prosecutors the local officers such as the Collectors and District Magistrates, and the District and Sessions Judges are consulted, and generally one of the leaders of the local bar is appointed, provided that his record in other respects is satisfactory. The educational qualifications required for the post of Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor are the District or High Court Pleaders' Examination or a degree in Law.
